The Army Medical Department (AMEDD) offers a unique opportunity to serve in various locations and gain valuable experience in patient care, education, and innovation. AMEDD officers attend the Basic Officer Leader Course (BOLC), which provides a basic understanding of the Army and teaches the principles behind becoming a resilient, agile leader. AMEDD doctors are exposed to a number of advanced techniques and technologies, and they can participate in fellowship training and continuing medical education opportunities with leading private institutions.

Medical school students have an opportunity to qualify for the Health Professions Scholarship Program (HPSP) and have 100 percent of the tuition for a graduate-level health care degree paid for at their schools of choice. HPSP recipients qualify for a monthly stipend to help defray educational and general living expenses. With over 90 areas of concentration, Army doctors have a high first-choice match rate for their chosen specialties.

Army doctors are able to participate in fellowship training and continuing medical education opportunities with leading private institutions. Army doctors can order tests and dispense medication without excessive layers of approval. In Army Medicine, you may have an opportunity to serve in other parts of the country—and possibly other parts of the world—where many travel and vacation opportunities exist for you and your family. Army doctors are prepared to perform their medical duties immediately after completing their residencies. Army doctors have the freedom to pursue clinical awards and recognition from top medical associations.
